One idea, told twice over.

twofold is a daily antioxidant supplement. Its name sets the creative brief: a wordmark split into "two" and "fold", capsules split into green and white, and a tin split into body and lid. The film takes that doubling and makes it the whole visual language.

Across seven shots, the olive tin rolls into a pile of two-tone capsules, splits apart, floats among falling capsules, stands as the hero in the pile, and twists its lid open and shut. There's no voiceover and almost no text: the product and its materials do all the talking.

01

Duality

Every element comes in two parts: two-tone capsules, a two-weight wordmark, a two-part tin.

02

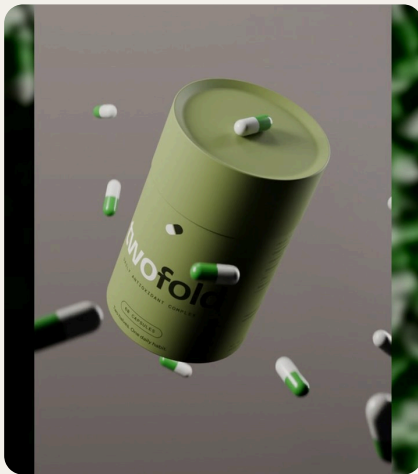

Material

A matte olive tin against glossy capsules and a soft warm-grey studio backdrop.

03

Motion

Rolling, floating and twisting moves that show off the packaging from every side.

Production note. In the hero shot the camera originally framed past the top edge of the backdrop, showing a dark band of empty world background. The corrected master extends the studio wall over it. For future renders, enlarge the backdrop, tilt the camera down slightly, or set the World colour to the studio grey.
